Collection Historical Note

Charles Bryan Rulon was born on May 23, 1954, in Noblesville, Ind. to Alice M. (Simmermon) Rulon and Gene Rulon, and grew up in Arcadia, Ind. with his family members. Rulon's grandmother inspired him to play piano, and later his neighbor, Penny Caccina, taught Rulon how to play. While his parents were not involved in the music world, Rulon stated they "were very good about taking me to piano lessons and dropping me off at concerts by the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra" (Moore 2017). In 1965, he attended Walnut Grove High School for the fifth grade and picked up the trombone. During his high school years, he performed in school concerts, marching bands, and with the brass quintet. Rulon graduated from Hamilton Heights High School in 1972.

In 1976, Rulon started attending Indiana University in Bloomington, Ind. for a Bachelor of Music (BM). He studied compositions with teachers and composers Bernhard Heiden, Frederick A. Fox, and John Eaton. Rulon continued to practice the piano with his teacher, Bronja Foster. Rulon first encountered synthesizers in college and stated, "They were making sounds that I heard in my head all my life." (Moore 2017). After gaining his bachelors, Rulon continued to attend Indiana University for his Masters in Music (MM) in Bloomington, Ind. During that time, he taught as an Associate Instructor for the Center for Electronic and Computer Music at Indiana University and became the Director of the Electronic Music Ensemble from 1977 to 1980.

In May 1980, Rulon received an invitation from the Polish Government to perform his composition, "Entropy", in Warsaw, Poland for the ISCM concert series. Rulon created his master's thesis, "Ritual for the Industrial Tribes", for Indiana University sometime in January 1981. His thesis contained many mixed media elements which included; music, performance art, images, and video. He graduated with his Masters in Music (MM) in both Composition and Electronic Music in 1981.

In 1981, Rulon accompanied Layman Jackson Foster to New York City, where the two moved to 405 E 12th St in the East Village, Manhattan. The pair worked freelance jobs and collaborated on shared jobs; they worked on theatre projects for the Ensemble Studio Theater, New York University Theater, and Children's Dance Theatre between the years 1984 to 1985.

Layman Foster met Matt Sullivan at a party in 1982 and introduced Sullivan to Rulon due to their shared interest in music. Sullivan and Rulon created the band, First Avenue, with double bassist Bill Kannar joining a few years later. First Avenue, an improvisational live-electronic band, used acoustic and digital instruments in their performances. First Avenue performed often around lower Manhattan and invited guests to perform alongside them during the show (Layman Foster being a regular collaborator). Sometime between the 1980s and 1990s, John Schaefer played First Avenue's music on his show "New Sounds". Rulon released the running cassette tape, "Momentum I" sometime around Thanksgiving in 1983, which grew in popularity. Runners utilized the tape's multimeteric design to find their pulse no matter their skill in running. Air India bought commercial rights to use the song in their commercials to advertise their airlines.

In 1991, Rulon began his graduate studies at Princeton University and received his PhD in composition in 1995, while also continuing his work with First Avenue. He taught music at the Thurnauer School of

CRDC at HEPL N-644, N-645, N Bryan Rulon Collection

Music, New Jersey from 1989 to 1991, and taught at Princeton University from 1993 to 1994. Rulon also received the Guggenheim Fellowship in 1996 and co-created an opera, "[Still Life with Daniel]", with Orlando Ferrand.

During the HIV/AIDS crisis, First Avenue performed music in the Palladium nightclub in New York City to fundraise money for people affected by HIV/AIDS. When HIV/AIDS testing first rolled out in New York City, the band members used their relief to inspire their song, "Dream Again." In 1994, Layman Jackson Foster died due to complications caused by HIV/AIDS. Rulon, alongside Curtis Bahn, made the song "SelfRequiem" in Foster's memory. Rulon collaborated for the album, "And Trouble Came: Musical Response to Aids" where "SelfRequiem" is featured.

Rulon's physical health started to decline sometime between the 1990s and early 2000s. Matt Sullivan took Rulon to his hospital trips, and Rulon's mother, Alice Rulon, often traveled back and forth from Indiana to take care of her son. In 2006, Rulon made the decision to move back to Indiana due to open-heart surgery. In an interview conducted by Tom Moore in 2012, he described how he felt about the artistic scene in Indiana. "...I feel very alienated from the arts living here. It is a choice that I made in coming out here, but once I am here, why would one try to get anything happening when you fear it will not be appreciated."(Moore 2017). Rulon continued practicing and teaching the piano during his stay in Noblesville, Ind.

On April 13, 2015, C. Bryan Rulon passed away in his home in Noblesville, Ind. On October 17, 2022, his mother Alice Rulon donated his music compositions to the Crossroads Discovery Center at Hamilton East Public Library for historical preservation.

Layman Jackson Foster was born in 1952 to Betty C. (Hall) Garland and Layman Jackson Foster, Sr in Speedway, Ind. Foster graduated from John Herron School of Art in Indianapolis, Ind. in 1974 and continued his education for his Bachelor of the Fine Arts (BFA) from Indiana University in Bloomington, Ind. in 1978. He collaborated with Rulon during their time in college by doing live collage and painting during Rulon's music performance of "Entropy" in Bloomington, Ind.

In 1981, Foster asked C. Bryan Rulon to accompany him to New York City. They moved to 405 E 12th St in the East Village, Manhattan. The pair worked freelance jobs and collaborated often on shared jobs; they worked on theatre projects for the Ensemble Studio Theater, New York University Theater, and Children's Dance Theatre between the years 1984 to 1985. Foster later met Matt Sullivan at a party and introduced him to C. Bryan Rulon. Rulon and Sullivan went on to create the band First Avenue.

Foster had his artistic debut during the 1983 Army Terminal Show in Brooklyn, NY. Newspapers described his artwork "...despite his obvious indebtedness to past masters, Mr. Foster's individuality comes across strongly..." (Harrison 1986). The galleries Jamie Szoke Gallery (NYC 1985), Greathouse Gallery (NYC 1984), P.S. 1 (Long Island City 1984) also displayed Foster's artwork after his initial debut. An anonymous donation occurred in 1985 of Layman's monotype print and plates, "Ida Busy Resting" to the MET Museum and still currently in the collection as of 2025.

Foster artworks touched on portraiture, still life scenes, and a few religious imagery scenes. He dabbled in mediums such as printmaking; monotypes or intaglio, and oil painting. Foster combines his subject matter with techniques that are in abstract artwork. In his paintings, he uses broad and bold lines to outline his subjects and uses a variety of vivid colors throughout to give it a more contrasting look. When making human figures, he focuses more on the geometric shapes of the figure and enlarges the head, hands, and feet. The background typically includes patterns of geometric shapes that make the subject stand out. In his printmaking, while he approaches the subject in a similar fashion, the lines gain a more distinct sketchy texture. Foster collaborated often with First Avenue, assisting in making many of their flyers and creating artwork during their shows.

Foster contracted AIDS sometime during the 1990s and while still living in the East Village he went blind. In August 1994, Foster died due to complications from HIV/AIDS. C. Bryan Rulon, alongside Curtis Bahn, made the song "SelfRequiem" in Foster's memory. Rulon collaborated for the album, "And Trouble Came: Musical Response to Aids" where "SelfRequiem" is featured.

As of December 2025, many of Foster's artworks are in possession of Matt Sullivan, friend and former First Avenue oboist. Sullivan had discussed plans of converting parts of his Florida home to a gallery dedicated to his late husband, Ken Cro-Ken, and friends including Layman Foster and C. Bryan Rulon.
